Master of Arts in Education/Adult Education and Training

Rise to the challenge of training and educating.

Adult learners bring a wealth of personal and professional experiences to class, and learn best through a unique set of strategies and techniques. To help you master the art and science of adult training and education, University of Phoenix offers the Master of Arts in Education/Adult Education and Training (MAEd/AET) degree program.

Taught by scholar-practitioners, the program can help you develop the skills and expertise essential to working with adult learners in a corporate training, professional development, community college, nonprofit or human services setting. The curriculum encompasses instruction in andragogical theory, the needs of adult learners, critical issues in adult learning, instructional design and strategies, assessment, and the growing use of technology for successful learning in the 21st century.

Study a solid core curriculum:
- Organizational communication for adult education and training
- Foundations of adult learning theory
- Community-based education
- Curriculum theory and instructional design
- Multicultural strategies for the adult learner
- Assessment of learning
- Facilitating online learning
- Marketing adult education
- Facilitating change
- Social media for professional learning
- Program development in adult education

The MAEd/AET curriculum is aligned with the Association for Talent Development® Competency Model.
